Two Different Fates While Riding The Train: A Pair Of Christian Western Romance Novellas Victoria Otto

Two Men, One Love, And God's Will is a beautiful story about a woman who, after two years of corresponding with a man out west, accepts his invitation of marriage and sets out on her journey. On the train she meets a stranger and enjoys their frequent chats and stories from the bible. One night, everything is literally turned upside down as the train comes to a violent screeching halt and they both find each other in the darkness, then jump from the train with nothing more than the clothes on their backs, but with the woman clutching her bible firmly in hand. What happens after that is a test of the will to survive, for both their physical bodies, and their spirits. Headed West: Strangers On A Train #2 (Lilies Of The Field), is an exciting adventure, as well as a love story. A woman doctor is headed to Sacramento to start a new practice -- she hopes. Where she was from wasn't exactly behind her plans to set up practice and she almost lost her faith, but when she met a well-dressed man on the train, with a briefcase chained to his wrist, she got far more than a boring train ride to the West Coast.
