Bowdoin College: Off the Record - College Prowler (College Prowler: Bowdoin College Off the Record) Derrick S. Wong Introduction from the Author

Not long ago, I flipped through college guidebooks and viewbooks trying to gain a better understanding of what different schools had to offer. I kept thinking that there might be one perfect school for me, but I later realized it wasn't about finding the perfect school. It was about finding the school that allowed me to be who I was, and to shape me into whom I want to become. I did not consider Bowdoin College until near the end of my college search because of its small size, unassuming reputation, and rural location. However, I'm glad it came into my radar because had it not, I would have never discovered how supportive teachers, friends with similar dreams, and encouraging coaches and staff drive me to become a better learner, a better athlete, a better leader, and most importantly, a better person.

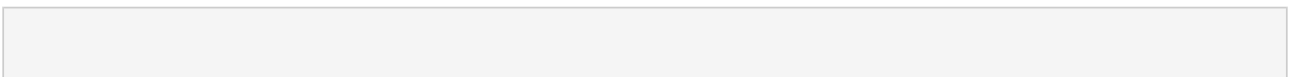

Eventually, I saw Bowdoin for everything it had to offer. Bowdoin offers excellent resources for a school of its 1600 student body size. The faculty, administration, and staff are warm, friendly, and encouraging. They put students wishes and desires as their priorities. They serve as the students guide and advocate. Bowdoin's faculty put teaching first and research second. They have designated office hours, but will work with students on an individual basis. The professors are experts in their field, and often get invited to speak at prestigious universities.

The Career Planning Center on campus offers databases that schools of much greater size barely offer and works on pioneering consortiums with other reputable institutions to give its students the resources to find the best internships, fellowships, and jobs.

The best thing about Bowdoin is the warm and encouraging student body. The closeness this provides is an appeal over larger institutions. Although half of students on campus graduated from private schools, level-headedness remains the standard. Studying is done for the sake of learning, and not out of competition with your peers. It's all about pushing yourself to do your best at Bowdoin. Interesting, intellectual conversations and passionate debates about politics, sports, philosophy, and life routinely fill the dining halls, union, and dorms. Everyone brings a unique ability and interest in the arts, music, writing, sports, community service, and more—with enthusiasm in all they do. Their zest for life energizes campus.

Bowdoin is an amazing place to spend four years. What distinguishes the school is its ability to empower Bowdoin students to face any challenge head on, to take risks, and to get the sense that they are part of a bigger picture. This place is an ideal choice for any high school senior to spend their undergraduate years as they transition from adolescence to adulthood.
