Electroplating HENRY C. REETZ

Excerpt from Electroplating: A Treatise for the Beginner and for the Most Experienced Electroplater

It is not necessary that the electroplater, in making a beginning, should have a scientific knowledge of chemistry and electricity, although, unquestionably, the better posted he is in those branches of the sciences that relate to his trade, the more likely he is to succeed. While it is quite possible for a man of average skill to fit himself to be an expert electroplater in certain lines, by a careful study of methods and apparatus, and especially by imitating a practical plater, yet it goes without saying that, the more he can absorb of the real science of the business, the why of the how, the less will be his trouble with batteries and solutions and the greater will be his success.
