Songs Unspoken Frank Alexander Wray

In this book of Songs Unspoken, Volume 1, poet Frank Alexander Wray gives testimony for the silent and homeless spectres drifting along our cities' streets, seeking shelters in doorways. In the first poem, "Homeless," he notes their presence in every city, walking "the lonely trails along the way," almost as if they were in a wilderness. In "A Street Child," the poet compels us to look into this youngster's eyes and see in them the eyes of all homeless children with "mouths dropped, clothes worn / mind, body, and soul worn." The poem "Man in a Box" depicts a homeless man who is boxed in by more than his cardboard shelter. This is a book of poems about the cities' forgotten ones, who now have their own troubadour in this poet, as he voices their numbing despair.
