Son Of Jacob followed a booklet I recently wrote and printed for my immediate family's information regarding our grandparents settling in Canada from South Russia in the 19th century. I was encouraged by several readers asking me to expand on that small book. With that in mind I set about to do further research. The more I got into the project the more I realized it was becoming an autobiography since my life took over to build, in a large part, where the earlier generations had laid the foundation. It seemed important for me to write about the various families but to also include their spiritual foundation as members of the Mennonite community. Several elements of the Mennonite spiritual make-up included honesty, pacifism, and gratitude for the welcome Canadians, and Canada in general, had given them. It was noted that the Mennonites never set about to change Canadian laws to be compliant with their own values and customs.
