A Face in the Rain Ken W. Simpson

This collection of free verse continues in the tradition of T S Eliot, who created a new approach to writing that freed poets from the strict adherence to the formal dictates of metrical poetry, as an added dimension to the poetic oeuvre. My poetry is subjective, unconstrained by formal rules, yet based on the rhythmic arrangement of words in lines. This allows greater freedom of expression because rhyme is not didactically at the end of lines, but wherever it seems appropriate. To quote T S Eliot: "It is this contrast between fixity and flux, this unperceived evasion of monotony, which is the very life of free verse." My collection includes haiku, which does require the discipline of syllables, and is uniquely and traditionally Japanese. Ken W. Simpson began his vocation as a poet late in my life. A Face in the Rain is his fourth book. A retired teacher, he lives in Victoria, Australia. Publisher's website: <http://sbpra.com/KenWSimpson>
